

TIME FLIES!

100 YEARS OF CIVIL AVIATION IN AUSTRALIA

 air_heritage heritageoftheair.org.au

Time Flies! is a travelling exhibition that will mark 100 years of civil aviation in Australia, highlighting unusual objects and stories that explore how aviation transformed everyday life in Australia's diverse communities.

Australia's first Air Navigation Act came into force on the 28th March 1921. To mark this centenary the Heritage of the Air Research Project is developing a travelling exhibition called Time Flies! We ask the question 'how has aviation changed life in your community?', exploring how work, communications, community services, family connections, travel and holidays have been changed by aviation and what special stories about these changes emerge from local aviation heritage.

To develop the content around the exhibition we are now seeking submissions for stories/images regarding civil aviation. These may be featured on travelling banners, via a digital exhibition or on our Heritage of the Air social media channels. We are seeking crowdsourced stories to present a unique social history of aviation. We are looking for objects or collection items that you think represent or tell a story about Australian aviation- stories that are perhaps hidden, quirky, about ordinary people, and not widely known. You may even like to share your own personal story about aviation! Surprise us!

Submit your story: <https://heritageoftheair.org.au/blog/time-flies/>

Credit: John Oxley Library, State Library of Queensland, ca. 1925